

BAPTISM IN THE BIBLE AND
INFANT BAPTISM

Does the Bible teach the infant children of Christians are to be baptized? Or, was baptism only to be given to “believers” who consciously profess allegiance to Christ? If this is a question you need to work through, I hope you will find this short study helpful. In it I will make the case that the Bible teaches that it is right to baptize the children of Christians.¹

The view of baptism I will be defending is expressed in the great Reformation confessions (Genevan, Helvetic, Belgic, Westminster, etc.) and catechisms (Heidelberg, Westminster Larger & Shorter). Many of the greatest minds of the Christian Church have written and defended these confessions, men such as John Calvin, Francis Turretin, Samuel Rutherford, John Owen, Jonathan Edwards, Charles Hodge, Benjamin B. Warfield, J. Gresham Machen and many others to this very day. These confessional statements and the great defenders of them stand in opposition to Roman Catholicism’s understanding and practice of baptism.²

What is the Issue?

The infant baptism issue is whether we should baptize the children of Christians before their profession of faith. We all agree about adult converts—they must confess their faith prior to their baptism. Baptists and paedobaptists disagree about how to deal with the infant (and young) children of Christians. We acknowledge there is no explicit statement about the “infant baptism” of a Christian’s child. It is sometimes hard for Baptists to also see: neither is there an explicit case of a Christian’s child who grows up and is baptized on profession. There is then nothing explicit about the baptism of children on either side. This must be acknowledged by both sides if our discussion is to be fair. Even more, many Baptists appeal to the examples or commands of adults who believe and are then baptized, like the eunuch (Acts 8:37). But the issue is not whether adult converts confess their faith prior to baptism. Everyone agrees they should. The issue is what do we do with the new convert’s children. We cannot settle the case by appealing to a text which tells us this child was baptized or this child was not baptized. No appeal to the cases of adult converts can settle the question.

This question turns on one point. We must decide whether the children of believers are to be treated the same way as they were in the Old Testament. Thus we must determine whether the New Testament affirms continuity or discontinuity concerning the inclusion of believers' children into the new covenant, and thus covenant signs and rites.

The (Reformed) covenantal infant baptism view maintains baptism should be given corporately, to all under the household of a believing head of household. Infants, when they are born into a believing household, therefore, should be baptized. This was the original pattern of circumcision. It was for the household, then for those born into the household (Gen. 17:27). Is the covenant household (infant) baptism position correct? Are children of Christians to be baptized? Or, is the Baptist correct? Only individuals who are mature enough to confess their faith and do so are to be baptized. I do not think it is unfair to contrast the two views in this way: Is the individual-believer thesis affirmed, or is the covenantal-family thesis affirmed for New Testament baptism?

Is Baptism is a Sign, Like Other Signs?

In previous eras biblical signs were given corporately to the family, inclusive of future generations. Has that changed? Is new covenant baptism a radical departure from the way God "did it" in the Old Testament? This is a question of the continuity of an established pattern of sign-reception. Baptists (those who practice exclusive "believer baptism") of all varieties answer, "yes." Now it is individual, on the grounds of one's profession.

The Bible is one book and not two. Therefore, we must ask whether the symbol of baptism as an outward ritual is similar to other faith rites in the older portion of Scripture. Rituals which involve a symbolic act, such as baptism, are connected to Biblical covenants. In virtually every case Biblical covenants include signs which visibly represent the realities behind the covenant promises. Do these covenant signs include children?

Reviewing the Biblical teaching, we find the covenant with Adam involved all the children of Adam. "As in Adam all die" (1 Cor. 15:22, Rom. 5:12). The covenant with Noah included the "salvation of his household" (Heb. 11:7). The sacrifices of the patriarchs (including Noah, Job, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) were for the whole family. Job offered "burnt offerings according to the number of them all" (Job 1:5). Similarly, "Jacob offered a sacrifice on the mountain, and called his kinsmen to the meal" (Gen. 31:54). Circumcision was given to Abraham as a sign of God's covenant for "you and your descendants after you throughout their generations" (Gen. 17:9). Under Moses the blood of the Passover lamb preserved the firstborn in the household. Israel was to observe Passover “as an ordinance for you and your children forever” (Ex.12:24). Even in the promise to David, the Lord said, “I have made a covenant with My chosen; I have sworn to David My servant, I will establish your seed forever, and build up your throne to all generations” (Ps. 89:3-4).

Covenant (Administration)	Visible Sign	Descendants Included
Creation/Adamic	Tree of Life	yes
Noahic	Rainbow	yes
Abrahamic (Other Patriarchs)	Circumcision Sacrifices/Meals	yes yes
Mosaic	Passover (blood, then meal)	yes
Davidic		yes
New Covenant	Baptism (entrance) Lord's Supper (continuance)	?

Therefore, in every case in the Old Testament, the pattern of covenant administration includes a principle of family inclusion and successive generations in both covenant content and covenant recipients of the signs. Covenant promises are given to households in the previous redemptive eras. Is this true of the new covenant? Is the visible sign of entrance into the new covenant (baptism) to be administered to the household of a believer? If so, then just as in circumcision and other signs of covenant, those who come into that household by birth or adoption would also have a right to the rite.

Are Children Still Included?

Let us continue by answering the question, Who was baptized in the Bible? In obedience to Jesus’s command to baptize (Matt. 28:19-20), who did the apostles baptize? By their actions, how did they apply the call to enter into the new covenant? In looking at all the actual recorded cases of apostolic baptism, is the individualist-baptist thesis affirmed, or is the covenantal-family thesis affirmed?

Let’s consider all the examples of Christian baptism recorded throughout the apostolic history of the church, beginning in Acts. Do these examples indicate only individual, professing believers are to be baptized or do they indicate both adult believers and their family members are to be baptized? The basic outline of Acts is indicated in the first chapter. The gospel of Christ goes forth: “You shall be My witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and even to the remotest part of the earth (Acts 1:8).³ The patterns of baptism follow this expansion.

Adult Conversion Baptisms	Household Baptisms
3000 (men) Pentecost (no household present)	Cornelius and household
Samaritans: (both men and women) Simon the Sorcerer	Lydia and household
Ethiopian Eunuch (no household)	Philippian Jailer and household
Paul (no household)	Corinthians: Crispus and household
Disciples of John (12 men) (no household present)	Stephanas and household
Gaius (and household?)

In summary of the actual baptisms, we find the following: (1) The new covenant promise came in it’s fulfillment “to you and your children” (Acts 2:39) at Pentecost. Only men (3000) are said to have been baptized. (2) In Samaria “men and women alike” (Acts 8:12) were baptized, including Simon (the apostate Sorcerer). (3) The Ethiopian eunuch (who had no familial household) was baptized (Acts 8:38). (4) Paul (who had no familial household) was baptized (Acts 9:18; cf 1 Cor. 7:7-8). (5) Cornelius’s household was baptized (Acts 10:48, 11:14). (6) Lydia’s household was baptized (Acts 16:15). (7)The Philippian Jailer’s household was baptized (Acts 16:33). (8) Many Corinthians were baptized, including Crispus, Stephanas’s household, and Gaius (Acts 18:8, 1 Cor. 1:14, 16). (9) The disciples of John (adult men) were baptized (Acts 19:5).

These are the facts about those baptized. From this we learn that of nine people singled-out in the baptism narratives—five had their households baptized (Cornelius, the Jailer, Lydia, Crispus [inferred], Stephanas), two had no households for obvious reasons (eunuch & Paul). That leaves Simon, who actually turned out to be an unbeliever, and Gaius, whom Paul baptized (1 Cor. 1:14).

As for Simon, I think it is reasonable to conclude he was an atypical case. Certainly, his case would be a less than ideal basis for the Baptist view, since he turned out to be an unbeliever. As for Gaius, in Romans 16:23 we read, “Gaius [is] host to me and to the whole church.” This implies he was a man of some means. As such, he may have had at least household servants, if not a familial household. Gaius is mentioned with Crispus who was a household head. Crispus, “believed in the Lord with all his household” (Acts 18:8). Thus, the household was undoubtedly baptized with him. Yet, Paul said in no uncertain terms, “I baptized none of you except Crispus and Gaius” (1Cor. 1:14). Paul could name Crispus as head of the baptized household, just as he could have with Gaius. Most likely in that culture, Paul simply spoke of Crispus as representing the household in the administration of baptism.⁴ Therefore, if Gaius had a household, it is quite reasonable to believe it was baptized, just like Crispus’s household.

About this time, one can see the hands raising of our Baptist brethren to object. These important Biblical facts regarding NT household baptisms are often dismissed. One Baptist said, “Since the New Testament teaches only believer’s baptism the only logical conclusion is that the people in these households were all believers.” This is a quite predictable response—everyone in these households must have believed (i.e., since we already know only believers were baptized; this is begging the question).

Think for a moment what this response requires us to believe. In the individual baptism narratives, Luke and Paul intentionally include more irregular and anomalous cases of baptism (households), than “regular” cases. Remember the outline of Acts—the gospel was to go to Jerusalem, all of Judea and Samaria, and the remotest part of the earth (Acts 1:8). After the Samaritan baptisms, we have the baptism of Saul (Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles), then when the gospel crossed to Gentile territory, beginning with Cornelius, every baptism passage is a household baptism passage—except where we are expressly told those present were “twelve men,” who were Jews after all (Acts 19:7). The Gentile households of Cornelius, Lydia, the Jailer, Stephanas, and possibly Gaius (see the previous discussion) were all baptized.

Outline of Acts The Gospel Goes To...	Baptisms Follow This Outline
Jerusalem, Judea	3000 Men at Pentecost
Samaria	Eunuch, Samaritans, Simon
Ends of the Earth Transition: Apostle Paul (Acts 9) First Gentile: Cornelius (Acts 10) God-fearer: Lydia (Acts 16) New Convert Gentiles: The Jailer (Acts 16), Corinthians (Acts 18)	Saul (apostle to Gentiles) Cornelius's Household Lydia's Household Jailer's Household Corinthians: Crispus's Household Stephanus's Household Gaius, 12 Men in Ephesus

Was it coincidence when the gospel went to Gentiles, their households were baptized? Acts is a selective history of thousands of examples of baptism over the first few decades of the church. Surely Luke did not record the only household baptisms in the entire apostolic period. Rather, this was the routine practice of the apostolic church as the gospel went to Gentile families. The gospel and its outward sign went to families because it was families who were to be saved. “The covenant which God made with your fathers, saying to Abraham, ‘and in your seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed’” (Acts 3:25).

Many Christians know the answer to the Biblical question, “What must I do to be saved?”—”Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you shall be saved.” That’s not the answer in the Bible, rather, “Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you shall be saved, you and your household” (Act 16:31).

The pattern of Gentile household baptisms should not be so quickly dismissed by Baptists. It is not as though we have a hundred cases of baptism and there are these exceptional, anomalous few household cases. We have nine individuals identified; five clearly have their households baptized; two do not have households (eunuch, Saul); one is dubious (Simon); and Gaius is left (1 Cor. 1:14, see the above discussion). This is not a promising set of statistics for the Baptist thesis.

The reply, “But every member of the household believed,” will not be persuasive to one who considers the specifics of the two cases which include statements about the households and faith (the Jailer 16:31-34 & Crispus 18:8). Consider the nuances of these texts. Do they support the individualist (Baptist) thesis (every member believed) or the covenant family thesis (household members followed the leader according to their capacity).

In the Philippian Jailer passage (Acts 16:31-34) and the Corinthian passage with Crispus (Acts 18:8), the Greek text has singular verbs, not the plural verbs, to describe the action of believing. These texts do not say, the Jailer (or Crispus) “and (kai)” household members “believed [plural]” (with a plural verb). Instead, these texts teach what any Old Testament believer might have expected: the Jailer, the household head, “rejoiced (singular verb) greatly, with all his house (panoikei, an adverb), having believed (pepisteukos, participle, singular) in God” (16:34, from the literal rendering of the 1901 American Standard Version). Crispus, the household head, “believed (episteusen, verb, singular) in the Lord “with” (sun) all his household” (Acts 18:8). However, observe Luke’s careful language indicating baptism is administered to each member of the Jailer’s household: “he was baptized, he and all his household” (kai hoi autou pantes, literally, “those of his all”) (16:33).

In the case of the Jailer, the narrative is set up in a covenantal frame, “What must I [individual and singular] do to be saved?” The answer is covenantal. “Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you [individual] shall be saved, you and your household” (Act 16:31). These texts, when carefully considered, strongly support the covenantal thesis.

The Philippian Jailer’s household is very important to the purpose of Luke. Luke takes some time explaining this. Why? The Jailer was the first recorded baptism of an outright pagan. Previous Gentiles had been God-fearers, worshipping the true God of Israel. The eunuch worshiped in Jerusalem. Cornelius was a God-fearer and devout. Lydia “worshiped God.” Philippi was a Roman colony. Many retired soldiers were rewarded with land there. It is likely this Jailer was a former Roman soldier. The Jailer was about to kill himself before Paul and Silas called out to him. This indicates his Roman value system which called for the duty of suicide in the face of some failures, like the loss of one’s prisoners.

In fear and trembling with an earthquake, no less, he cried out, “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” The answer is pregnant with Biblical concepts: “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved, you and your household” (Acts 16:31). The text goes on to say after Paul preached the gospel, “He was baptized, he and all his household” (16:33). We are told Paul and Silas were brought into the house of the Jailer to eat, and the Jailer “rejoiced greatly, having believed in God with his whole household” (16:34).

The Exodus images and resonances of this passage would not have been lost on the original audience. This happened at midnight (16:25). Luke emphasizes the events of washing happened, “the same hour of the night” (16:33). This is an unmistakable Passover allusion (Ex. 11:4-5).

“Midnight” in Hebrew [tokh ha-laylah] literally means, “the division of the night,” or the point of release between darkness and light. Ironically, with the release of those in bondage (Paul & Silas), it was the Jailer’s house which would be delivered by the blood of the Lamb to pass through the Red Sea of baptism and rejoice on the other side.

The inclusion of Israelite children were essential in the Exodus, since this event unfolded the Abrahamic promise (e.g., Gen. 18:19). Moses’s request to be released was to “go with our young” to “hold a feast to the LORD.” Pharaoh was willing to let the men go, but not “your little ones” (Ex. 10:7-11). Then came “one more plague,” the death of the cherished first born child “at midnight” (Ex. 11:29). “Then [Pharaoh] called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, ‘Rise, go out from among my people, both you and the children of Israel’” (Ex. 11:30-31). The children were essential then and now.

By casting the Jailer’s deliverance as a Passover kind of event, Luke strengthens the image of the deliverance of children. It would hardly be a Passover if the first-born was not saved and if the whole household did not pass through the Red Sea of baptism (1 Cor. 10:1-4).

Are Children in the New Covenant?

Despite the Jailer narrative, which is a profound confirmation of the covenantal inclusion of the household, someone might argue the new covenant is different from previous covenants in just this sense: the promise of the new covenant is only for spiritually regenerate people and therefore excludes the children of believers until they show themselves to be regenerate. As pointed out previously, this could hardly be a happy fulfillment of the people of the Exodus. Nevertheless, let us ask, Are the children of new covenant believers explicitly included in the new covenant promises or are they excluded? One writer says, “Nowhere in the content of the new covenant is the principle ‘thee and thy seed’ mentioned.”⁵ If this were true, such a change in covenant recipients and covenant promises could hardly be more drastic! Covenant membership has always and ever included “you and your children” and covenant content is most fundamentally the Lord is “God to you and your descendants” (Gen. 17:7, Deut. 7:9, 30:6, 1 Chr. 16:15, Ps. 103:17, 105:8).

Consider these new covenant prophecies. Let the reader decide on the testimony of many Scriptures whether the children of believers are included in the explicit and repeated new covenant promises.

The very first word about the new covenant was in Deuteronomy 30:6:

- Moreover the LORD your God will circumcise your heart and the heart of your descendants, to love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul, in order that you may live . . .

Jeremiah alludes to the above Deuteronomy passage throughout his prophecy. He emphasizes the inclusion of children in the new covenant promise:

- Jeremiah 31:1: “At that time,’ declares the LORD, ‘I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be My people.”
- Jeremiah 31:17: [Though Rachel weeps for her children (destroyed in captivity), when they return] “‘there is hope for your future,’ declares the LORD, ‘and your children shall return to their own territory.’”

Notice verse 36 of the classic text of the new covenant, the offspring of covenant participants are explicitly included:

- Jeremiah 31:33-37: “But this is the covenant which I will make with the house of Israel after those days,” declares the LORD, “I will put My law within them, and on their heart I will write it; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people.”If this fixed order departs From before Me,” declares the LORD, “ Then the offspring of Israel also shall cease From being a nation before Me forever. “ 37 Thus says the LORD, “If the heavens above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out below, Then I will also cast off all the offspring of Israel for all that they have done,” declares the LORD.”
- Jeremiah 32:37-40: “Behold, I will gather them out of all the lands to which I have driven them in My anger . . . And they shall be My people, and I will be their God; 39 and I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear Me always, for their own good, and for the good of their children after them. 40 “And I will make an everlasting covenant with them that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; and I will put the fear of Me in their hearts so that they will not turn away from Me.
- Jeremiah 33:22-26: “As the host of heaven cannot be counted, and the sand of the sea cannot be measured, so I will multiply the descendants of David My servant and the Levites who minister to Me . . . 26 then I would reject the descendants of Jacob and David My servant, not taking from his descendants rulers over the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. But I will restore their fortunes and will have mercy on them.”

Other Old Testament prophecies about the coming age of the new covenant are equally clear the children of believers are included:

- Ezekiel 37:24-26: David My servant shall be king over them, and they shall all have one shepherd and they shall dwell there, they, their children, and their children’s children, forever; and My servant David shall be their prince forever. 26 “Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them, and it shall be an everlasting covenant with them.... (NKJV)
- Zech. 10:6-9: “And I shall bring them back, Because I have had compassion on them; and they will be as though I had not rejected them, for I am the LORD their God, and I will answer them. 7 “And Ephraim will be like a mighty man, and their heart will be glad as if from wine; Indeed, their children will see it and be glad, Their heart will rejoice in the LORD . . . They will remember Me in far countries, and they with their children will live and come back.
- Joel 2:1-29: Blow a trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm on My holy mountain! . . .So there is a great and mighty people; There has never been anything like it, Nor will there be again after it To the years of many generations . . . 15 Blow a trumpet in Zion, Consecrate a fast, proclaim a solemn assembly, 16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, Assemble the elders, Gather the children and the nursing infants. . . . My people will never be put to shame. 28 “And it will come about after this That I will pour out My Spirit on all mankind; and your sons and daughters will prophesy....
- Isaiah 44:3: For I will pour out water on the thirsty land and streams on the dry ground; I will pour out My Spirit on your offspring, and My blessing on your descendants.
- Isaiah 54:10-13: . . .Nor shall My covenant of peace be removed . . .13 All your children shall be taught by the LORD, And great shall be the peace of your children.
- Isaiah 59:20-21: “And a Redeemer will come to Zion. . . .” My Spirit which is upon you, and My words which I have put in your mouth, shall not depart from your mouth, nor from the mouth of your offspring, nor from the mouth of your offspring’s offspring,” says the LORD, “from now and forever.”
- Malachi 4:5-6 “Behold, I am going to send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and terrible day of the LORD. 6 “And he will restore the hearts of the fathers to their children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the land with a curse.

In the New Testament, the apostles also repeatedly included the principle of “you and your seed.”

- Luke 1:17: “And it is he who will go as a forerunner before Him in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers back to the children, and the disobedient to the attitude of the righteous; so as to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.”
- Luke 2:49-50: For the Mighty One has done great things for me; and holy is His name. 50 and His mercy is upon generation after generation toward those who fear him.
- Acts 2:39: For the promise is for you and your children, and for all who are far off, as many as the Lord our God shall call to Himself.
- Acts 3:25: “It is you who are the sons of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with your fathers, saying to Abraham, ‘and in your seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed.’”
- Acts 13:32-33: “And we preach to you the good news of the promise made to the fathers, 33 that God has fulfilled this promise to our children in that He raised up Jesus . . .
- Romans 4:13-17: For the promise to Abraham or to his descendants that he would be heir of the world was not through the Law, but through the righteousness of faith . . . 16 For this reason it is by faith, that it might be in accordance with grace, in order that the promise may be certain to all the descendants, not only to those who are of the Law, but also to those who are of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, 17 (as it is written, “A father of many nations have I made you”) in the sight of Him whom he believed, even God, who gives life to the dead and calls into being that which does not exist.

These texts provide overwhelming and unambiguous Biblical support for the conviction the children of believers are included in the promised new covenant. How many more verses are required to convince one the new covenant includes the children of believers? Certainly no one can produce even one text which explicitly excludes them. Dozens of texts explicitly include them!

The whole message of the whole Bible requires that our children are a heritage. If baptism is the sign of inclusion in covenant with God, then who did the apostles baptize? The unmistakable impression is baptism applies households of believers. We have no biblical reason to doubt infants born into such households are to be baptized by virtue of the covenant promises inclusive of them.

What About Baptizing Disciples?

Before our Lord ascended to reign at the right hand of the Father, where He reigns now, He commanded the discipling of the nations. He predicted the advance of His good news “in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8), just as we have seen in the study of baptism above. He said to His disciples, “Go ye therefore, and teach [disciple, or make disciples of] all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost” (Matt. 28:19 KJV).

Some claim Jesus’s command excludes anyone from baptism who is not a self-conscious disciple, making credible profession of faith. Such interpreters claim this Commission commands the discipling of “individuals from all nations, not the national entities” and the individual baptism of only “those who were made disciples.”⁶

This a good theory to support the individualist view, except the grammar of this command does not support it. Rather, the direct command (mathateusate panta ta ethna baptizontes autous) may simply be translated, Disciple all nations, baptizing them (nations). The pronoun “them” (autous), grammatically refers to “nations” (ethna) a noun, not “disciples,” since “make disciples” (mathateuo) is a verb.⁷

If one thinks about the Commission both grammatically and culturally, a Jewish Rabbi of the First Century or before would not have been troubled if the text had said, “Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, circumcising them [the nations] in the name of Israel’s God, teaching them [the nations] to observe all that I commanded you.” This was precisely what some sects were doing (Matt. 23:15). They would not have thought this was a Commission to abandon infant circumcision for exclusive adult circumcision.

This point is not theoretical. In the Jerusalem presbytery meeting in Acts 15, they speak of the “conversion of the Gentiles.” (15:3). The Judaizers insisted, “Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved” (15:1). “It is necessary to circumcise them” (15:5). The “converted Gentiles” or the “believing Gentiles” were to be circumcised. What does this mean? Clearly, those to be circumcised were not just self-conscious professors or “believers” in that sense, but also their little children and infant children born to them. Thus, the Bible speaks of those “converted” inclusively of the children.

Indeed, see how the apostles practiced the baptismal mandate: adults after confessing discipleship and their households were baptized whenever they were present. This is precisely because the Great Commission baptismal mandate is not separate from the original Abrahamic Great Commission. The Great Commission is a restatement of God’s purpose to renew the world with people after his own image, just like the original promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:1-3).

The purpose of God in converting the nations (in missions) is the mature statement of Abrahamic promise after the True Seed has accomplished redemption. Father Abraham had many sons, as you know, “I am one of them and so are you . . .” Recall Peter preached to the Jews, “It is you who are the sons of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with your fathers, saying to Abraham, ‘and in your seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed’” (Acts 3:25). The promise of the gospel is: “the Gentiles are fellow heirs and fellow members of the body, and fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the gospel” (Eph. 3:6). Whereas Gentiles were “separate from Christ, excluded from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world”—“Now,” writes the apostle, “in Christ Jesus you who formerly were far off have been brought near by the blood of Christ” (Eph. 2:12-13). Gentiles may now participate as receivers of the “covenants of promise.” We sing, “Father Abraham Had Many Sons . . .” It is true, we have become Abraham’s children too! Amazingly, Gentiles may become “Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to promise” (Gal. 3:29), and of course, not just adult Gentiles but their children (see Acts 15, discussed earlier).

The apostles repeat the promise to Gentile Christians. The promise to Abraham is “certain to all the descendants, not only to those who are of the Law, but also to those who are of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all (as it is written, ‘a father of many nations have I made you’)” (Rom. 4:16-17). In other words, the promise is to “all the descendants” of both believing Jews and Gentiles, because Abraham is the “father of many nations,” and in him all the “families of the earth shall be blessed” (Acts 3:25, Gen. 12:3). Households of a Cornelius, or a Lydia, or a Philippian Jailer, or a Stephanas, could now be counted as Abraham’s children. This means children are included.

Is Baptism in the Old Testament?

When reading the Bible from left to right, we see the deep reason there is a consummate Commission to baptize. Many Baptists treat baptism as a completely new thing with John the Baptist and see it from the start as only applying to self-confession mature individuals. On the contrary, the water God provides for refreshment and cleansing is a theme throughout all of the Bible. From Eden flowed rivers. There are springs in the patriarch narratives. Israel (men, women, children and livestock) passes through the Red Sea. A laver is at the entrance of the tabernacle. Joshua led Israel across the Jordan into the Land. In the temple of Solomon an ocean and basins of water on chariots create a stylized river flowing out. The prophets Ezekiel and Zechariah see visions of rivers flowing out in the new covenant (Zec. 14:8). So yes, there is a flood of references to baptism(s) in the Old Testament. Washings in the tabernacle, as well as crossing of the Red Sea are explicitly called baptisms (Heb. 9:10, 1Cor. 10).

Christ said of the Spirit's reality: "He who believes in Me, as the Scripture said, 'From his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water'" (Jn. 7:38, cf. Is. 58:11, Zec. 13:11). This is surely the image of the new covenant spiritual reality pictured by Ezekiel's temple (Ez. 47:1-3). This is a prophecy of the Commission to baptize the nations.

Then he brought me back to the door of the house; and behold, water was flowing from under the threshold of the house toward the east, for the house faced east. And the water was flowing down from under, from the right side of the house, from south of the altar (Ez. 47:1).

Because of this rich and deep them, a baptismal prayer developed in the Church historic, called "The Great Flood Prayer" which is attributed to Martin Luther.

Almighty and eternal God, who through the flood, according to your righteous judgment, condemned the unfaithful world, and according to your great mercy, saved faithful Noah and his household, yet drowned hard-hearted Pharaoh with all his army in the Red Sea, and has led your people Israel dry through it, thereby prefiguring this bath of your holy baptism, and through the baptism of your dear children, our Lord Jesus Christ, has sanctified and set apart the Jordan and all water for a saving flood, and an ample washing away of sins: we pray that through your same infinite mercy you would graciously look down upon this your child, and bless this child with a right faith in the spirit, so that through this saving flood all that was born in this child from Adam and all which they have added thereto might be drowned and submerged; and that they may be separated from the unfaithful, and preserved in the holy ark of Christendom dry and safe, and may be ever fervent in spirit and joyful in hope to serve your name, and with all the faithful may be worthy to inherit your promise of eternal life, through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

Luther draws from the Apostle Peter's flood imagery. It is an antitype, a fulfillment of a biblical picture, of the salvation of the household of Noah. It symbolizes the washing of the conscience. "There is also an antitype (antitypos) which now saves us—baptism (not the removal of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), through the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (1Pet. 3:21 NKJ).

Do We Follow Jesus in Believer Baptism?

Someone might ask, Aren't we supposed to follow Jesus in baptism? Wasn't He baptized as a believer? We are to imitate Christ's character. We are to follow the apostles as they followed Christ. We are to strive for Christlikeness, fully; but we cannot enter into the unique offices as Messiah. We are not born of virgins. We do not meet Satan in a 40-day fast in the wilderness. We do not cleanse the temple, etc. Upon reflection, there is a uniqueness to His baptism also. I have known those who went to the "Holy Land" to be baptized in the Jordan River, even though they had been baptized before. Better the wisdom of Luther who said the Lord has "sanctified and set apart the Jordan and all water for a saving flood" (from the "Great Flood Prayer").

John was to go "in the spirit and power of Elijah" who divided the water of the Jordan (2Kgs. 2:8ff). John "prepared the way" for Jesus quite literally. John was "preaching a baptism of repentance" at the Jordan river (Mark 1:4). Literally, John was in the wilderness beyond the borders of the Land where they "went out to him" (Mark 1:5). He called the people to follow his "path" outside of Israel and to "turn" (repent) and cross the Jordan to enter the Land in renewal. John's baptism for Israel was a sign of passing through or crossing into renewed Israel to prepare for Messiah.

Theologian Colin Brown wrote, "John was organizing a symbolic exodus from Jerusalem and Judea as a preliminary to recrossing the Jordan as a penitent, consecrated Israel in order to reclaim the land in a quasi-reenactment of the return from the Babylonian exile . . . the purity and quantity of the water were of less significance than the historic, symbolic significance of the Jordan itself as the boundary and point of entry.”⁸ In the background, Deuteronomy looks to a time when they “cross the Jordan” being led by Joshua (Deut. 4:21). The rest of the NT draws upon various threads of this crossing into Christ, through death and into resurrection life on the other side (Rom. 6:3-4, Col. 2:11-12).

John's baptism of Jesus involved this renewal of Israel through the Jordan (as before with Israel, Joshua, Elijah, and Elisha) to “manifest” (Jn 1:31) the Anointed One, “Christ.” Anointing restores fallen man (Adam) back into the presence of the Lord (Ps. 2:2). Priests were appointed through a ritual washing, anointing and vesting (clothing) (Ex. 28:41, Num. 3:3, etc.). Hebrews teaches Christ was thus appointed “by God as a high priest according to the order of Melchizedek” (Heb. 5:10). Through this He “appoints a Son, made perfect forever” (Heb. 7:28). This happened at Jesus’s baptism (Luke 3:21, 4:18). Therefore, Jesus “having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He has poured forth” the Spirit on us (Acts 2:33).

With this rich background in mind, through our baptisms we are cleansed, we “cross” or “pass” into Christ, and we are clothed. Thus, we have a new status as adopted sons and daughters of the Father. We are vested with the Spirit, able once again to enter into Garden of God to have communion with the Father. What was pictured in the high priest’s ordination is now true of the “royal priesthood” in Christ (1 Pet. 2:9). Our new identity is conferred in baptism, even as it was for Israel in the first crossing of the river (1 Cor. 10:1-4). We are “all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus for all of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ” (Gal. 3:26-27).

Is Baptism in Place of Circumcision?

It is just because baptism relates to the Spirit we see a connection between baptism and circumcision. Both are symbols of covenant promise and entrance signs. Baptism and circumcision symbolize the same reality, the work of the Spirit. Yet, baptism is greater than circumcision. Many have objected to this kind of argument. I do not think all the eggs of infant baptism are in the basket of circumcision. But there is a relationship between circumcision and baptism in Scripture.

Let me try to convince the reader of this: (1) Circumcision represented the work of the Holy Spirit which is the circumcision of the heart. Stephen drew upon a very deep stream of the Biblical waters when he said to his persecutors, “You men who are stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears are always resisting the Holy Spirit; you are doing just as your fathers did” (Acts 7:51). This meaning of circumcision is very evident in many Old Testament passages (Lev. 26:41, Jer. 9:26, Ez. 44:7, 44:9, Deut 10:16, 30:6, Jer. 4:4). The very promise of the new covenant included this metaphor, “The LORD your God will circumcise your heart and the heart of your descendants” (Deut. 30:6). Paul, who held the cloaks of those who stoned Stephen, learned this too (perhaps from Stephen). It permeates virtually all of his epistles (Rom. 2:29, 4:11, 1 Cor. 7:19, Gal. 5:6, 6:15, Eph. 2:11-12, Phil. 3:3, Col. 2:11-12, 3:11). The reality behind physical circumcision is circumcision “which is of the heart, by the Spirit, not by the letter” (Rom. 2:29). Circumcision signifies the heart renewal of those who are spiritual dead and unclean.

(2) Baptism represents the work of the Spirit. The very first words we read about baptism in the New Testament say this. John said, “I baptized you with water; but He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit” (Mark 1:8). Peter connects baptism with “the gift of the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:38). He says of Cornelius’s household, “Surely no one can refuse the water for these to be baptized who have received the Holy Spirit just as we did, can he?” (Acts 10:47). Paul alludes to the image of baptism in Titus 3:5 when he says, “He saved us . . . by the washing of regeneration and renewing by the Holy Spirit.” Baptism signifies the renewal of those who were spiritual dead and formerly unclean.

Therefore, (3) a person who has been heart-circumcised has been Spirit-baptized, and a person who has been Spirit-baptized has been heart-circumcised. What can this teach if not that these two ritual acts signify the same reality? The passage usually discussed at this point is Colossians 2:1-12: “and in Him you were also circumcised with a circumcision made without hands, in the removal of the body of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ; having been buried with Him in baptism, in which you were also raised up with Him through faith in the working of God, who raised Him from the dead.” This text is disputed, especially in the meaning of “the circumcision of Christ.” Is this spiritual circumcision/regeneration or something else? It may be that this circumcision “of Christ” is the “cutting off of Christ” on the cross, i.e., His death in the flesh. Even so, this would still correlate baptism and circumcision, but addressing the cutting off or “death” aspect: circumcision=death, baptism=death. My argument, does not depend on a particular reading of this passage, but rather that there are parallels between circumcision and baptism in their meaning.

Baptism signifies a person is in covenantal union with God just as circumcision did. For example, Romans 6:3-4 teaches those “baptized into Christ Jesus” “have become united with Him in the likeness of His death” and “His resurrection.” Galatians 3:27 tells us those “baptized into Christ have clothed [themselves] with Christ.” First Corinthians 12:13 indicates the work of the Spirit in uniting us in the Body: “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free, and we were all made to drink of one Spirit.” These passages affirm baptism signifies the work of God’s Spirit in our spiritual union with Christ.

Baptism most certainly signifies the work of the Spirit (Mark 1:8, Acts 10:47, Titus 3:5). It is commissioned to be a rite of cleansing which identifies one with the Triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit (Matt. 28:19-20, Acts 10:48). Its meaning is unmistakably the Spirit’s work in cleansing us, and thereby uniting us with Christ and His body (Rom. 6:3, Gal. 3:27, Col. 2:11-12, 1 Cor. 12:13). This is what is plainly taught in Scripture.

Perhaps the hardest part of seeing this is realizing this is true, even if some baptized people are not living testimonies of it. It is true in the same way in which Jesus saves us from our sins, even though all who believe in Jesus are still sinners. The truth of baptism is objective, but it is not automatically true of all the baptized. We can also see this of circumcision. Many who had flesh-circumcision were lying about what it really meant. Going through the ritual does not automatically generate all of the reality signified. This is true for adults no less than little children.

Baptism is a (visible) sign and seal of inclusion into the covenant community, a community not of one nation (Israel), but made from all nations. Hence, baptism functionally replaces the Abrahamic rite of circumcision (befitting to the antecedent age), and is its sacramental equivalent (in the age of fulfillment).

	Circumcision	Baptism
Ritual	cut off flesh	cleanse the flesh
Reality	circumcision of Christ circumcise the heart united to Israel	baptism by the Spirit cleanse the heart united to New Israel/Christ
Recipients	primarily Jewish nation/All in such households (males)	expanded to every nation/All in the household (males and females)

The temptation for Baptists is to assume since the reality signified in baptism is only true in regenerate people, it is only proper to give this sign to those who demonstrate this spirituality. Reasoning this way, one entirely overlooks what has just been Biblically proven. Circumcision fundamentally signifies the same reality as baptism. As Calvin says, “For what will they bring forward to impugn infant baptism that may not be turned back against circumcision?”⁹ Abraham’s circumcision was the sign and seal of his justification by faith. He “received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had while uncircumcised” (Rom. 4:11). But Isaac, who possessed the same Spirit-wrought reality, was circumcised as an infant.

So then, the sign of an internal spiritual reality can be received when one is (painfully) conscious of the reality, like Abraham. Or, it can be received before one is conscious of the reality, like Isaac, and every other believing Jew. Baptism can be received with understanding (in the case of an adult) or it can be “recalled” with understanding (as in the case of an infant). In both cases it represents the inward work of the Spirit which we hope to be true in both.

Baptists sometimes argue it is more certainly true of the “believer” (professing faith) than the infant (even when raised in the discipline and admonition of the Lord). This is a very unconvincing point to me, having grown up in Baptist churches which regularly practice repeat-baptism two or three times on their own members. In many cases the Baptist position is “I-feel-like-I-am-now-saved-baptism” vs. “believer” baptism. No practitioners of baptism, regardless of their theology, only baptize regenerate people, for not even the Apostles managed to do that (e.g., Simon the Sorcerer, Acts 8).

Were Their Children Included?

Let us read our New Testaments with an understanding of the original audience. If we stand in the sandals of the First Century Jewish (and proselyte) followers of Jesus, how would they have reacted to the Baptist claim that believer’s little children are not to be considered in the covenant or part of the people of God. Imagine the shock of Crispus, the synagogue leader (Acts 18:8), who believes (on Friday, let’s say) his children are in covenant with God, part of the people of God, and members of the synagogue of God. Then, on the Sabbath after Paul preaches, he finds out that—in the fulfillment of the promised seed of the women, through the covenant promises, in the fullness of time, in the era of great David’s greater Son, in the Messianic kingdom and glory of Israel . . . now his little children have no part in the people of God!

Imagine the new proselyte family who have recently undergone the painful passage to covenant membership (circumcision), only to discover in the new covenant his children are afforded less of a place than they who were in the shadows of Judaism. From the original audience's mindset, this view of the new covenant would be more than disappointing: it would be Biblically inconceivable.

To add, imagine the overwhelming status of inferiority Gentiles would have felt if the Jews' children were considered members of the Christian synagogue (James 2:2) and part of the "household of God," while Gentile children had neither sign nor membership. With the clearly stated objections of the Judaizers (e.g., circumcision is required as a covenant sign), if the Apostles taught that the infant children of Jews (and Gentiles) are now excluded, it is very remarkable no hint of this discussion arises in the pages of the New Testament!

How Do We Live Out Baptism?

This brings us to where the rubber meets the road. This, I have found, is the most strenuous objection to infant baptism and what the Bible says about baptism. It goes like this, if all you have said is true, then are baptized children saved? If baptism represents union with Christ (Rom. 6:3-4, Gal. 3:27), then shouldn't we consider baptized babies "in Christ"?

Think of the analogy of marriage. The wedding event is critical to a marriage. All people that are married were somehow "wed." But no one treats the wedding, in and of itself, as the totality of the marriage. A faithful marriage is not the automatic result of a beautiful wedding. We all know of exceptions. Neither is a life of salvation automatic because of baptism, whenever it happens (in childhood or adulthood).

Do you need a wedding to be married? It would not be impossible for a man and wife to love one another as if they are married. A person may trust Christ unto salvation without baptism; but, this is biblically irregular. There is something quite important about a wedding for a marriage. If one obeys good wedding vows, a strong marriage will result. Likewise, if baptism's meaning and obligations are lived-out, then a life of salvation will be evident. Baptism calls for faith ever after, but in my argument, a conscious faith is not the prerequisite. This is because God wants us to raise our children in the consciousness and culture of Christ (Eph. 6:4).

Instead of relegating baptism to being useless, we should simply see it in relation to a life of faithfulness. Baptism is to be the official beginning of faithfulness, and in baptism, the commitments of a happily married life in Christ are vowed. I am washed, and thus I shall live.

Thinking of it this way: baptism is just as applicable to little children as to adult converts. If you have brought your child to Christ, now you must obey what the Lord requires. Our father Abraham was told, “For I have chosen him, in order that he may command his children and his household after him to keep the way of the LORD by doing righteousness and justice; in order that the LORD may bring upon Abraham what He has spoken about him” (Gen. 18:19). Yes, this is the Old Testament—but it is directly applicable to us. We must heed that ancient command, “You shall teach them diligently to your sons and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way and when you lie down and when you rise up” (Deut. 6:7). Do you intend to command your children to keep the way of the Lord? Do you intend to teach them diligently to love the Lord their God (Deut. 6:4)? Without the reality of leading one’s home to Christ, in Christ, and for Christ, the water of baptism is worse than useless, it is the flood water of judgment.

When the first new covenant (Gentile) households instructed, they were commanded to bring their children “up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (Eph. 6:4). Just as in a previous era, Joshua nobly said, “As for me and my house, we will serve the LORD” (Josh. 24:15).

A baptized adult should be obedient to living a cleansed life in Christ. A baptized child should be a child being brought up in the discipline and admonition of the Lord, whose parents vow, “As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.” Practically this means every person who grows up in a Christian home should be taught God’s Word from their earliest times. Just like Timothy, each Christian child should be exhorted to “continue in the things you have learned and become convinced of, knowing from whom you have learned them; and that from childhood (brepheos, infancy) you have known the sacred writings which are able to give you the wisdom that leads to salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim. 3:14-15).

Therefore, covenantal baptism has a rich Biblical basis and leads to godly parenting. It imparts a hope of the sealed blessings of the gospel of grace. Baptized children should be viewed as those in the new covenant and should mature into all that implies (this is true of baptized adults as well). This does not mean automatic faithfulness. Rather it demands responsibility and faith, responding to the promises of God on the part of both the parents and the individual child. It is a sobering challenge to remember those who break covenant will receive a greater condemnation, even than the unbaptized (Heb. 10:28-30).

The baptism question is most essentially about the relationship of our children to our God. Old Testament saints considered their children in covenant with God, so also in the New Covenant/Testament. There is no difference in the OT or NT language about the children of believers.

The Place of Believers' Children: The Same in Both Testaments
	Old Testament	New Testament
Duties of Parents	"Command his children to keep the way of the LORD" (Gen. 18:19)	"Bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord" (Eph. 6:4)
Duties of Children	"Honor your father and mother" (Ex. 20:12)	"Obey your parents" (Eph. 6:2)
Blessings	"Live long in the land" (Ex. 20:12)	"Live long on the earth" (Eph. 6:3)
Children Must Obey the Word	"Your son and your grandson might fear the LORD your God, to keep all His statutes" (Deut. 6:2)	"Continue in the things [Scripture] you have learned" from infancy (2 Tim. 3:14-15)
Household Leadership	"As for me and my house, we will serve the LORD" (Jos. 24:15)	The jailer "rejoiced greatly, with all his household" (Acts 16:34, ASV)
Promised Reality	"I will pour out My Spirit on your offspring" (Is. 44:3)	"For the promise [of the Spirit] is to you and your children" (Acts 2:39)
Duration of Inclusion	"To a thousandth generation" with those who love Him and keep His commandments" (Deut. 7:9)	"His mercy is upon generation after generation toward those who fear Him" (Luke 1:50)
Sign of Inclusion	"All the men of [Abraham's] household. . .were circumcised" (Gen. 17:27)	The jailer "was baptized, he and all his household" (16:33) (Cornelius', Lydia's, Crispus's, Stephanus's households, too)

The Central Line of Objection

There still may be objections. Given the brevity of this study, let me examine what I take to be the central objection.¹⁰ The basic structure of the (new covenant) Baptist argument is this: we have (1) an explicit basis for "believers' baptism" and (2) no explicit warrant (an example or command) for "infant baptism." Undergirding this, (3) new covenant membership includes exclusively regenerate individuals and believers' little children cannot be assumed to be regenerate, thus (4) such children are not to be baptized until they confess their faith and show their regeneration.

I will answer, point by point. (1) The "explicit" baptisms are of "believers" only. But, a million cases of adult converts professing their faith before baptism prove nothing of themselves, regarding the infants of believers (the question at hand). Paedobaptists heartily concur with the practice of adult profession prior to baptism as is evident in every Reformed creed!¹¹ Most Baptist polemics just hammer away at the examples of adults, as though this settles the case. Ironically, the childless eunuch with his crystal-clear case of prior belief becomes the paradigm for settling the question of infant children. But the eunuch case cannot help us with how to deal with children, can it? As we have seen, the actual cases of baptism support the covenantal view. Virtually every person who could have conceivably had a household, had it baptized. The explicit cases of baptism, when fully considered, are not evidence of the Baptist view. Five household baptisms (of 9 individuals) is a strong evidence for the covenantal view.

(2) Explicit warrant for “infant” is lacking. But explicit cases on the baptism of believers’ children is lacking in both directions. There is no case of an “infant baptism,” and neither is there a case of the “believers’ baptism” of a Christian’s child. This question must be settled by the proper application of Biblical teaching related to the place of believers’ children, inclusion in the covenant, and the examples of baptism, such as the import of household baptisms. It cannot be settled with a direct appeal to an express text—like the eunuch’s profession. Again, the adult eunuch example cannot teach us how to deal with believers’ children. But the role of children in God’s covenantal plan was significant (Gen. 18:19) and it still is (Eph. 6:4).

(3) Is it true that new covenant membership includes exclusively regenerate individuals? No. There are many passages which teach the possibility of apostasy from the visible covenant community (Heb. 6:1-4, 10:28-30, John 15:2, 6, Rom. 11:21). There are many passages which teach the new covenant has stipulations for judgment (Matt. 16:19, 1 Cor. 11:29-30, 34, Heb. 10:30-31, 1 Pet. 4:17). There are many passages which teach the kingdom includes regenerate and unregenerate (Matt. 8:12, 13:24-31, 41, 47-50, 21:43, 25:1-13, Luke 13:28, Rev. 11:15). In this the new covenant is similar to the older covenant administrations. Even more, the paedobaptist, not the antipaedobaptist, possesses explicit warrant for the inclusion of children in the new covenant (Deut. 30:6, Jer. 31:36-37), church (Eph. 1:1/6:1-4, Col. 1:2/3:20, 1 Cor. 7:14), and kingdom (Matt. 19:14, Mark. 10:14, Luke 18:16).

(4) By putting the entrance sign of the new covenant on the children of believers, we are not making any assumption that is not explicit in the Bible’s teaching. The Bible explicitly and repeatedly speaks of the children in the new covenant. The (new covenant) Baptist practice assumes that by profession of faith, the baptismal candidate is regenerate. But this may be false. The paedobaptist acts simply on the basis that the child is under the terms of the covenant, which is explicitly taught in the Bible. In any case, no one baptizes out of “knowledge” that a person is “regenerate” (taking this is in the normal sense). Here I think a practical theological argument militates against the coherence of “Baptist practice.” Surely the identification of the regenerate requires more than a mere “profession.” I have known many people who have made a profession, been baptized, and then fell away. Professing the faith is no sure evidence of regeneration. So then on the level of church practice we are left with the sage words of B.B. Warfield, “. . . no one, however rich his manifestation of Christian graces, is baptized on the basis of infallible knowledge of his relation to Christ. All baptism is inevitably administered on the basis, not of knowledge, but of presumption.”¹²

A Few More Questions

- Why baptize children if they do not understand the meaning of baptism? Baptism is like circumcision. For adults it is entered with some understanding, for infants it is “remembered” with understanding. If a person is a new convert their knowledge of baptism may be very infantile anyway. In other words, all baptism is infant baptism (in the sense of really understanding its meaning). In principle, one cannot object to such a sign being given to an infant because it is so clear in the case of circumcision. Is it meaningful that my little children are citizens of the United States? Though they do not comprehend it now, they have all the rights and protections of a citizen, though under age. As they grow, they will learn their duties, along with all the rights and privileges their citizenship afforded them, while they were yet unaware of it. So it is with baptism.
- What about baptized children who grow up and forsake the faith? Apostasy may be committed by children baptized as infants, believer-baptized children, and adult baptized converts. It is the Biblical function of church discipline (Matt. 18:15-20), not baptism, which purifies church membership of those who willfully and unrepentantly deny the faith. We should not try to keep people from entering in baptism, but keep them faithful by teaching, love, and discipline.
- What if a baptized child has a dramatic conversion later? Are they to be baptized again? A Christian (child or adult) should only be baptized once, since it signifies our entering into union with Christ. To redo it presents the picture of falling from grace. The reason many re-baptisms take place is (wrongly, I believe) because baptism is viewed as meaningful only if the one baptized has a certain prior experience (i.e., baptism is a testimony to my conversion experience). According to official statistics, one prominent Baptist denomination reported over 40% of its baptisms one year were for “rededication.”¹³ I have argued (above) this is a misunderstanding of baptism. So if a baptized child has a later dramatic conversion, the parents, the pastor and the person should rejoice that the claim placed upon them at baptism has yielded fruit by the grace of God.

- Do you believe infant baptism saves the child? No. Neither does adult baptism save the adult. Even so, we should not dismiss it as unimportant. (See the discussion above about wedding/marriage.) Baptism “saves” a person in a similar the sense that a wedding marries a person. It is the start of the union, it is the official declaration, but does not automatically provide a perfect married life.
- Shouldn't baptism be done by immersion? If we compare baptism and communion, whether the Lord's Supper is actually a “supper” (deipnon, an evening meal) is not essential to its purpose, meaning, or sacramental quality. Even though, the word in the Bible is the word “supper” (evening meal). In the same way, the mode of baptism, whether by immersion, pouring, or sprinkling, is surely less important than its meaning and recipients. Reformed Christians do not usually require a particular mode to be necessary for baptism. However, a strong case can be made that most Biblical baptisms or “washings” were like an “anointing” from above, e.g., in the Tabernacle sprinklings (baptismois in Heb. 9:11, see verses 9:13, 19, 22). Further, the baptism of the Spirit is spoken of as the Holy Spirit “poured out upon the Gentiles” (Acts 10:45-47). As discussed earlier, baptism is also a “crossing” into (e.g., Red Sea, Jordan river, John's baptism). The baptismal washings in Scripture are many and varied, so don't worry about the water part.
- If you believe in infant baptism, do you have to believe in infant communion? I have written on this elsewhere.¹⁴ The earliest historical sources on infant baptism, like Cyprian (200s) and later Augustine (400s), make clear infant baptism and infant communion were normative in their day. Still, this is a separate question and depends upon other principles such as: (a) whether infants or young children partook of Passover meal and other Old Testament sacrificial meals, (b) if there were any qualifications for participation, such as asking and understanding (Ex. 12:26), and (c) whether in the new covenant there are any additional qualifications.¹⁵ B. B. Warfield (no paedocommunist) said, “The ordinances of the Church belong to the members of it; but each in its own appointed time. The initiatory ordinance belongs to the members on becoming members, other ordinances become their right as the appointed seasons for enjoying them roll around.”¹⁶

Endnotes

1 I will contrast the “Baptist” position (believer’s, professor’s, or confessor’s baptism) with the “paedobaptist” or infant baptism position (paidion in Greek means “child” or “infant”).

2 Roman Catholicism places baptism in a system of sacramental merit. See the Council of Trent, 5th Session, decrees 4-5, from the year 1546.

3 All Scripture citations will be from the New American Standard Bible, unless otherwise noted. All of the italicized print in Bible texts represents points I am seeking to emphasize.

4 It is logically possible Paul baptized only Crispus and Gaius, then someone else baptized the households. However, it seems unlikely Paul would baptize Crispus and then turn the proceedings over to someone else.

7 “Nations” (ethna) is in the accusative case and so is the direct object of the verb. In this verse, the verb, “disciple” (mathateuo, in the imperative form), is a transitive verb, since it has an object. I am aware “them” is masculine in gender and “nations” is neuter. This usage is called the ad sensum use (according to the general sense). See for example, Matt. 25:32, “all the nations (ethna, neut.) will be gathered before Him; and He will separate them (autos, masc.) from one another.”

11 The Larger Catechism 166, for example says, “Unto whom is baptism to be administered? A. Baptism is not to be administered to any that are out of the visible church, and so strangers from the covenant of promise, till they profess their faith in Christ, and obedience to him, but infants descended from parents, either both or but one of them professing faith in Christ, and obedience to him, are, in that respect, within the covenant, and to be baptized.”

13 The number of rededication baptisms was around 60,000, according to the representative sample, “The Troubling Waters of Baptism,” Thomas Ascol, Founders Journal, available at www.founders.org.
